The Court of Appeal unanimously held Simon's submissions that the saving and transitional provisions in Civil Procedure Rule 48, combined with the more limited definition of "costs" applicable since 1 April 2013 (that now omits any reference to "additional liabilities"), together operated to preserve the former costs rules, with their attendant practice directions, to the assessment of costs that include additional liabilities.

- DEF v Southend University NHS Hospital [2019] – The claimant (aged 10 years) was injured because of negligent procedures during his birth in the defendant's hospital. The claimant was severely disabled by quadriplegic dyskinetic cerebral palsy level 4/5, having suffered damage in the deep grey matter of his brain. He always required assistance from multiple carers for the rest of his life. Settlement on liability was previously reached whereby the defendant was liable to the extent of 70% and substantial damages claim was settled.
- Hannah Bhadri v Dr. Hariram and Dr. Freed [2018] – Clinical negligence case against two GPs. The claimant was born with subluxation (partial dislocation) of her hips bilaterally. - R v F (2020) – Claimant's claim for substantial disability following a road traffic accident in 2014. The claimant was already paraplegic as the result of a previous road traffic accident in 2008. The case raised interesting questions of acceleration in paraplegia cases, and how to approach quantitative rather than qualitative differences in care needs because of a defendant's negligence.
- VWX v Connells Residential (2019) – The claimant was left with enduring neuro-psychiatric and vestibular symptoms after a modest blow to the head. He was 39 at the time of the accident and the principal breadwinner for his family. He had a pre-accident history of psychological vulnerability.
